Course description:

This course examines the diverse cultural meaning and structure of kinship relations and organizations. Different anthropological approaches in analyzing kinship structures and practices will be examined. In human societies, marriage, family and kinship are the most common and fundamental cultural practices, although there are diversities. This course equips students with the basic knowledge to understand human culture and society, and stimulates their interest in their own families and kinship organizations.

Learning outcomes:

The students will be able to (1) identify the diverse cultural meaning and structure of kinship relations and organizations, (2) better understand one's own culture and society as well as other cultural practices in the world, (3) identify the technique of studying family and kin relations, and (4) have opportunity to improve presentation skills.

Course content and teaching components:

There will be both lectures and tutorials. The lectures are designed to introduce specific topics in understanding marriage, family, and kinship. In each tutorial, we will be discussing various movies and documentaries as well as readings relating them to students' own experiences. Students are able to participate in discussions and presentations in tutorials, from which they will have opportunity to organize and integrate presentation materials, and give oral presentations. Fieldtrips will also be introduced in the course allowing students a first-hand understanding of kinship in its social and cultural context. Students are required to hand in two assignments (about 5 pages in length respectively), which could focus on the course fieldtrips and their own family.

Assessment scheme:

Two assignments: 15%

Participation: 15%

Final exam (multiple choice and short questions): 70%
